El Camino College Computer Science Students Take First Place

Three outstanding El Camino College computer science students won first place in a recent computer programming competition at California State University, Los Angeles.

The hardworking team of Dubem Enyekwe, Alan Williams, and Grant Walker, also known as "The Blue Screen of Death," won the top award in the contest's junior college division. All three students were recognized with certificates and a plaque that will be mounted on the wall in the El Camino College Computer Science Lab.

The contest was sponsored by Cal State LA's College of Engineering, Computer Science and Technology and includes an annual programming challenge that offers high school and community college students the opportunity to solve college-level and real-world programming problems by applying the principles of computer science.
