El Camino College Career Tours Offer Glimpse into “Real World”

El Camino College students have the opportunity this semester to get an up close and personal look into real world professions, gaining insight on a number of careers.

The “Career Tours” program offered by the Career Services office at El Camino College, will take students to the Inglewood Superior Court on March 29 to see what a career in this field might be like. Tours, including transportation, are all provided free of charge.

During the tour to the Inglewood Superior Courthouse, students will meet judges, participate in a pre-trial arraignment, and hear from experts in court-related fields.

Some other tours offered through the program this semester include visits to the Daily Breeze, and the Orange County Fire Authority.

All tours are open to students of all majors. They are arranged to cover a variety of disciplines, so students involved in different majors can see the different sides of each industry. For example, the tour of the Inglewood Superior Courthouse will highlight the work of various courtroom professionals such as judges, attorneys, court reporters and clerks.

Other services offered by Career Services include opportunities for extensive exploration and evaluation of interests, aptitudes, skills and other characteristics related to vocational and pre-professional planning. Students can register for career planning courses, join career workshops, learn job-seeking skills such as resume writing and interviewing techniques, and browse through the many research resources available in the Career Services office.
