El Camino College Journalism Students Win Top Awards

El Camino College journalism students recently won 20 awards at the California Journalism Association of Community Colleges Conference in Sacramento, including the top awards given for the campus newspaper and the campus magazine.

More than 600 students from 53 community colleges attended the event, competing in on-the-spot writing contests and attending workshops relating to media. The college newspaper, the Union, was awarded 96 points out of a 100-point score in receiving its award for overall excellence. The campus magazine, Warrior Life, was signaled out for photography, design and opinion writing.

Other honors came in sports writing, broadcast news writing, and enterprise reporting, which included nine stories the Union published relating to El Camino College's agreement with El Camino College Compton Center. The state organization also presented a scholarship to Heather Perry, features editor, for her academic and journalistic achievements.

Editors of the award-winning publications are Jeremiah Dobruck, David Saunders and Sylvia Masuda. Advisers are Jolene Combs and Lori Medigovich.
