Career Opportunities: Geography offers both variety and specialization. The geographer's responsibilities lie in understanding population pressures, food supply, future settlement areas, resource availability and distribution, and the quality of our physical and social environment.

Urban Studies focuses on the urban community and its environment and problems. Opportunities in these areas are expected to increase. The Federal Government will need employees to collect and interpret information. State and local governments will be expanding in such areas as conservation, environmental quality control, highway planning, and city, community and regional planning and development. Private industry expects to employ increasing numbers of geographers for market research and location analysis. Those who hold a Bachelor's Degree may find positions in government and industry. Choice positions in college and university teaching and research in industry and government create favorable prospects for the Ph.D. holder. Geography students can increase their chances of employment by having a strong background in or by developing a related discipline such as foreign language, natural resources, biology, recreation, wildlife management, sociology, psychology, economics, engineering, architecture, geology and political science. Summer or seasonal experience can provide practical knowledge to supplement college courses.
