El Camino College to Present “Gender in Media” ECC faculty members to discuss changing portrayals of gender in media

Two El Camino College faculty members will take on the topic of gender depictions in media during a lecture scheduled for 7 p.m. July 11 in the Campus Theatre.

Communication studies professors Francesca Bishop and Larry Leach will present “Gender in Media,” a discussion of changing portrayals of gender in media, as part of the Center for the Arts Resident Artists Series.

Bishop is a nationally recognized debate coach who led El Camino College’s outstanding forensics team to more than a dozen national championships in the last 16 years. The team recently finished the most successful season in its history, winning all four national championships – the first time this feat has been accomplished by any team. Bishop teaches argumentation and debate, mass communication and public speaking.

Leach has experience in a variety of areas within the communications field, including audio/video production, web design, video editing, sound engineering, project management, photography, image editing and graphic design, and other media-based content development. He teaches courses in public speaking and mass communication.
