DEPENDENCY STATUS

Most students entering a postsecondary school straight from high school are considered financially dependent on their parents for the purpose of financial aid. This means their parents must provide financial information on the FAFSA. In some circumstances, the financial aid office can change a student's FAFSA status from dependent to independent in situations where providing parental information may be difficult for the student.

The following are examples of circumstances that may be considered for a dependency override:

- An abusive family environment
- Abandonment and/or estrangement by parents
- Incarceration or institutionalization of both parents
- Parents cannot be located

The following circumstances would not be considered for a dependency override:

- Parents refuse to contribute to the student's education
- Parents are unwilling to provide information on the FAFSA or for verification
- Parents do not claim the student as a dependent for income tax purposes
- Student demonstrates total self-sufficiency

Note: Being considered independent does not automatically make you eligible for more financial aid. You may actually have more financial aid eligibility as a dependent student.

Determination of a change in dependency status by the financial aid office is made in accordance with our Professional Judgment Policy on a case-by-case basis.
